Suffering: it’s awful. We hate it. We run from it like a gazelle fleeing from a hungry lion. We will do almost anything to avoid it. But suffering is an inescapable part of living in this world. God does not spare even His most faithful servants from it.

Since the original sin of Adam, this world has lived under a curse, a curse of suffering and death that will remain until Jesus Christ is revealed as the King of Kings. Our bodies grow old and suffer numerous painful ailments. Exercising their God-given free will, sinful human beings continue to inflict devastating pain on one another. And the blood of the martyrs has often been the seed of the church. In the midst of it all, many are tempted to shake their fist at God and say, “Why me?” as if something strange were happening to them or as if they expect to somehow be exempt from the painful trials of this world.

What is the Highest Priority of Our Lives?
The life of Josef Tson, a Romanian pastor, illustrates the choices we all face when suffering or persecution comes to us. Beginning in October 1974, Pastor Tson was interrogated for six months, up to 10 hours a day, five days a week, simply because of his faithfulness in proclaiming the gospel. The goal of his interrogators was to “break” him, to make him their slave. They wanted him to abandon his faith and become their ally in destroying others who would dare to proclaim the gospel.

One interrogator said to him, “You’re going to be shot, but first I want you tortured so you will curse all that you hold sacred and holy.” That is exactly what Satan would like each of us to do when we encounter suffering. He wants us to give up on serving God and distrust God in the midst of our darkest hours.

In Josef Tson’s life he had learned to value Christ and his glory above his own life, safety and freedom. For him the advance of the gospel was the highest priority, not saving his own life. He knew that this life is not all there is and that a great reward is awaiting him for his faithfulness. The only way he could lose was by abandoning his trust in Christ.

If we are to bring the gospel to every tribe and tongue, we must value Christ and His kingdom above our own lives. Christ is worthy of all we have and all we are. We must choose to trust His sovereignty and His purposes when suffering does come. We must not shy away from proclaiming the gospel in order to protect ourselves, but rather boldly go to every unreached people.

It is hard, especially for Americans, to learn to die to self and the pleasures of this world. The Western, consumer-driven culture is designed around satisfying our every desire and avoiding suffering. This is probably why some in the West have developed a “health, wealth and prosperity” theology but not a theology of suffering. We are taught to live for the things of this world, and this has infected our churches. But when we come to faith in Christ, we receive a new master who has called us to be on mission with Him, and faithfulness to that mission will involve suffering.

Jim Elliot so aptly said before earning a martyr’s crown, “He is no fool who gives up what he cannot keep to gain what he cannot lose.” Like Elliot and his four companions who died with him in their attempt to reach the Waorani people of Ecuador, we must be willing to embrace suffering and death, especially when these come by way of our faithfulness to the mission Christ has given to us. The only way to glorify God with our lives is to trust Him with our suffering, even when it makes no sense and seems to serve no purpose.

It’s All About the Glory of God

The purpose of all of life is to glorify God and to make His glory known to every tribe and tongue. This is all part of God’s grand design for history—to raise up worshippers to Himself from every tribe and tongue. As John Piper says, “Missions exists because worship does not,” at least not within all peoples to the degree that is required for God to receive the glory He deserves.

No sane person seeks out suffering. But we embrace suffering when it comes, trusting in God’s sovereignty and provision, in order to advance God’s kingdom and His glory. We suffer hardship in order to meet the needs of hurting people around the world so they can see a glorious God who loves them and is worthy of their worship. We suffer willingly so that the whole world can see the all-surpassing value of Christ and His kingdom.

Why should the peoples of the world believe anything we say if we are not willing to suffer for Christ? Why should we expect the peoples of the world to live for Christ if we are not willing to die for Him? Let us resolve to respond to suffering in our own lives and in the lives of others in such a way that God receives the glory and His kingdom is established in all the earth.

1 The quotes from Josef Tson are excerpted from the article, Thank You for the Beating by Josef Tson, which appeared in the Fall 2009 publication of To Every Tribe, available at www.toeverytribe.com. Josef Tson has also written the book Suffering, Martyrdom and Rewards in Heaven.